PHILIPPINE SECRETS...

John & Hazel Belchamber have travelled regularly with us over the past 13 years. Here they recount their latest dive adventure to the idyllic islands of the Philippines.

Things don't get much better than hovering at five metres, mesmerised by the ever shifting patterns created by the dappled sunlight reflecting off thousands of sardines in a bait ball - just one of the long list of highlights of our first experience of diving in the Philippines.

Our 'safari' trip was a new approach promising a blend of resort based diving, high-energy currents and a taste of a liveaboard as we moved around the islands to maximise diving time and different environments.

Within two hours of landing in Legaspi via Manila, with its perfect volcano as a backdrop, we were in a boat at Donsol with snorkel, fins and masks at the ready to get into the water as soon as one of the crew spotted a whale shark. Over the next couple of hours we were privileged to encounter over four different individuals, some as close as half a metre away. A great way to start our holiday! After lunch we were transferred by a side rigged boat across the calm deep blue sea to Ticao Island Resort, the perfect decompression after the tiring long haul flight.

Arriving in the bay, our view was of a small group of wooden cabins and a welcome party with drinks. The combination of the setting, lovely accommodation with verandas and plentiful food provided simple comfort in which to relax. The diving at the Manta Bowl was great, delivering close encounters with mantas on two consecutive days.

Our morning departure to Malapascua was the point at which the true 'safari' element of our trip kicked in. Rather than the prospect of a long ferry ride, we had a 12 hour private journey with three dives along the way offering a variety of experiences; a fast current Superman flight across fresh water thermoclines, a macro dive with numerous nudibranchs and finally a remote drop-off with numerous shoals of fish.

In Malapascua we had pre-paid for six boat dives, but took the opportunity to extend this to maximise our chances of seeing the threshers and experiencing our 'David Attenborough' moment of the trip. Our strategy paid off. On both mornings (5.30am starts) when we were diving specifically for the threshers, we saw them. We also took one of the longer day trips out to the islands where corals were pristine, fish were in abundance and the macro proved worthy of more famous sites. With good 'après' diving involving beer, sundowners and a range of dining experiences, the location catered for all requirements both above and below the water.

Overall a trip with nearly 30 dives across three different environments, each with experiences that could be classed as 'once in a lifetime' and the unique 'secret safari' made this a memorable holiday and one we highly recommend.

DON'T JUST TAKE OUR WORD FOR IT...

"Thank you for the flawless arrangements in the Maldives. Everything went very smoothly and the Reethi Beach Resort was absolutely brilliant – just what we wanted and a place I would happily return to. The dive school was very professional and we ended up doing more skills training as well as five days of diving."

Rick H travelled to the Maldives in August 2015

"Thanks for all the planning and support you did for my recent amazing trip to Socorro. The holiday was a 'trip of a lifetime' and we saw amazing mantas on most dives, huge muscular dolphins that came right up to us, so many sharks we became totally blasé about them – except for the rare thrilling sightings of hammerheads. It was great!"

Caroline G travelled to Mexico in July 2015

SHARK ADVENTURES

Experience the thrill of world-class shark diving in the Bahamas. If you're after a 'trip of a lifetime' or want to be in the water with a key species we can offer you an unforgettable experience to three locations renowned for the best possible shark encounters throughout the year.

Oceanic white-tip

Although rare, this pelagic species is regularly seen in season around Cat Island. Enjoy diving and snorkelling encounters in the open blue with this inquisitive shark.

Cat Island, Season: Mar - Jun

Great hammerhead

These magnificent creatures aggregate in South Bimini each year to feed. The shallow, sandy site allows plenty of bottom time to observe this normally shy species.

Bimini, Season: Jan - Mar

Tiger shark

Taking centre stage at the Tiger Beach dive site, you'll encounter numerous other species of shark, but will be mesmerised by these curious apex predators.

Grand Bahama, Season: Sep - Mar

Oceanic White-tip Adventure

The adventure begins in Nassau, diving colourful walls and famous wrecks in contrast to drift diving and snorkelling in the blue from Cat Island, where encounters with oceanic white-tip sharks are the order of the day. Must be minimum advanced diver qualified.

11 days from £3,645

CUBA CALLING

Our shark inspired adventures don't stop with the Bahamas. The latest addition to our range of world-class dive destinations, Cuba's Jardines de la Reina promises some of the most exciting diving and pristine habitats in the Caribbean. This impeccably managed marine reserve boasts vibrant coral reefs, exceptional visibility, superb wall diving and more to enthrall adventurous divers.

The beauty and diversity here are not the only draw for divers. At least six different species of shark are seen in these waters, including silky, lemon and great hammerhead, plus unique encounters with American saltwater crocodiles.

Diving is from one of Avalon Fleet's spacious and comfortable liveaboard vessels on six night adventures throughout the year. Permits to dive Jardines de la Reina are strictly limited and booking in advance is highly recommended.

PNG DISCOVERED

with Stuart Philpott

Join renowned diving journalist and photographer Stuart Philpott on an exceptional adventure to uncover the magic of Papua New Guinea. Here Stuart gives us an insight on his diving career and love for this frontier land.

You've been diving for a long time, how did it all start?

I've been diving for more than 25 years now and looking back through my old logbooks I have actually spent more than a year of my life underwater. It all started here in the UK when a fisherman friend took me for a slightly unconventional try-dive. I was literally told to breathe from the mouthpiece and dumped off the side of the fishing boat. I could have easily blown an eardrum or burst a lung but luckily there was no lasting damage, not physically anyway, and for some reason the whole experience made me even more enthusiastic. I booked on to a proper certified course at a local dive centre and just kept on going. I am now a qualified recreational and technical diving instructor.

Your photos and articles are regularly featured in UK dive magazines. What have been your favourite assignments?

I always seem to get the more 'adventurous' assignments which can be anything from cave and tech diving to close encounters with sharks and crocodiles. I have been fortunate enough to visit so many mind blowing diving destinations, they all have their own unique features, but I do have a soft spot for South Africa, especially the sites around Aliwal Shoal and of course the Sardine Run.

It sounds as if you had some adventures on your recent reccie trip to PNG? Tell us more...

Papua New Guinea is the complete adventure package. Firstly it's totally uncommercial so don't expect to find bustling resorts. The hotels are usually small family run affairs. As for the dive sites, well, it's only one boat at each site and the boats only carry around 6 – 8 divers max so definitely no overcrowding. The dive sites are totally unspoilt, that's both flora and fauna.

During my whirlwind 20 day tour I managed to visit four different hotels located all over the country. Each area had its own unique coral and marine life inhabitants. One of the high points was definitely seeing my first ever pygmy seahorse. It was no bigger than my finger nail so the dive guide had to show me through a magnifying glass! I also encountered dolphins, sharks, whales and dugongs as well as exploring WWII aeroplanes and ship wrecks. There was so much to see and just not enough time to experience everything. Papua New Guinea is truly one of the last unexplored frontiers.

Congratulations to Lindsay Stratton for this winning image from our Bali underwater photography workshop with Jane Morgan. To view the finalists' images take a look at our website.

SUNKEN TREASURES

The eerie stillness and sense of history provided by a sunken shipwreck is something divers find hard to resist. Wrecks are also often home to fabulous coral reefs and marine life, providing an intoxicating mix for any diver. Here we showcase some of the finest wrecks in the world...

SS President Coolidge, Vanuatu

Tucked away on the island of Espiritu Santo in the Pacific, this 200m long behemoth was used by allied forces in WWII until she was sunk by mines. She came to rest just off shore and hides munitions and military supplies, while personal belongings lie scattered across the ocean floor.

Level: Intermediate & advanced
Dive Vanuatu from £3,195

The Coolidge makes an ideal combination with either Papua New Guinea or the Solomon Islands.

San Francisco Maru, Truk

The 117m long wreck of the San Francisco Maru is a must for experienced divers.

The ship went down upright and fully loaded, hence its nickname 'the Million Dollar Wreck'. A veritable treasure trove of warfare, the hold contains detonators, mines and torpedoes with trucks and tanks on deck.

Level: Advanced

Dive Truk from £2,545

Irako Maru, Coron Bay

After the Japanese had moved their ailing fleet from Manila in the Philippines, the US attacked on the morning of 24 Sep 1944, downing the entire remaining fleet. The Irako Maru responded with ferocity but was eventually sunk at the mouth of Coron Bay. She sits almost upright in 45m and at 147m long, makes for a number of spectacular dives.

Level: Intermediate & advanced

Dive Coron Bay from £2,195

Bianca C, Grenada

The largest shipwreck in the region, this luxury cruise liner is often referred to as the 'Titanic of the Caribbean'. The Bianca C caught fire after an explosion in the engine room and came to rest upright in 50m of water, ideally situated between a reef system and the big blue.

Meet THE DIVE TEAM

Here we continue with our Master (scuba) Mind series and in this issue we put our questions to the most experienced diver in the team, Charlie 'Chuuk' Munns. Charlie has been working with us for over five years and has dived all over the world clocking up a staggering 4,000 dives.

What or who inspired you to learn to dive?

I remember buying a whole load of comics and dive magazines from an NSPCC jumble sale when I was about eight, and preferred to read about diving than Desperate Dan! I eventually learnt in my gap year in the Coral Sea, Australia in 1991.

Where in the world would you most like to dive and why?

Socorro in Mexico is right up there. I love to dive remote and relatively unexplored places, the sorts of places others struggle to find on a map.

What is your favourite type of diving?

I have a history of reefs and wrecks mostly but I am a fan of big fish encounters and love to be surrounded by sharks of any size and species.

What is your most memorable marine life encounter?

I was catching lobster for a living in St. Kitts in 2005 and earned a good living from it. I was foraging in the cracks of a reef at about 18m when it went very dark. At first I thought a boat was passing over me, but realised it was too quiet. Within a second, it dawned on me I had a very large humpback whale swimming about 2m above my head. I later shared 90 minutes snorkelling with a mother and calf in the deep blue waters off St. Kitts.

Where was your last logged dive?

I have recently been lucky enough to visit Cuba, a mysterious destination that's been on my bucket list for some time. The highlight was a dive with an American saltwater crocodile.

Do you have any dive kit or gadgets you can't travel without?

A decent computer and dive light is a must on all my dives. I find the diving industry is held together by zip ties and duct tape.

Do you have a favourite film or documentary about diving?

The Big Blue

If you could travel anywhere, where would you go?

Almost anywhere new and I would love to see more of the Pacific islands. A liveaboard adventure around Tahiti or the Solomon Islands in search of mantas and tiger sharks would tick a lot of boxes. I have a fondness for Southeast Asia and there are plenty of bucket list destinations to visit in the Coral Triangle, a trip to Komodo would be amazing.

What has been your most memorable dive travel experience?

As soon as I first learned about diving for megalodon shark teeth, I knew I needed to do it. I dived off the Carolina coast in the USA and found four large teeth along with a bunch of prehistoric whale bones. They take pride of place at home.
